QUESTION OF THE MONTH

We posed this thought-provoking question to our mentors, and their responses revealed powerful reflections on what mentorship could have changed for them.

How do you think your life would have been different if you had a mentor while growing up or when starting your career?

VOICES OF CHANGE

“ I didn’t grow up with a mentor. Most of what I learned came from failing, figuring things out on my own, and trusting my instincts. Looking back, having someone to guide me might have saved me time, doubt, and a few breakdowns. But that journey made me resilient. Today, I try to be the mentor I never had for anyone walking a similar path. We rise by lifting each other. ”

HEMLATA MISHRA

Founder | MADnext

“ Looking back, if I had a mentor early in my career, the journey would have felt less lonely and far more strategic. Mentorship is more than guidance it’s the spark that ignites clarity, courage, and confidence. After two decades of mentoring women and youth, I’ve seen how even one conversation can change lives. I mentor to be the voice I once needed, and with every woman I support, I grow and evolve too. ”

SEEMA MISHRA

Registrar & Academic Head | ICRI India

“I feel that everyone learns a lot from trial, error, and experimenting. But the journey without direction and clarity makes you doubt yourself and takes time. I wish that early on, if I would have gotten a mentor, I would have taken fewer detours and doubted myself less. A mentor brings clarity, perspective, and nudges you to dream a little bolder.”

SHIKHA KHOKHAR

Founder | Seeday

“If I had a mentor early on, I could have avoided years of confusion and trial-and-error in choosing the right career path. I started without clarity, explored multiple roles—from faculty to corporate trainer to entrepreneur—learning everything the hard way. A mentor’s guidance would have saved time and accelerated my growth. Now, I mentor others in freelancing, entrepreneurship, and career building to help them succeed faster with the right skills and direction.”

VIJAYA LAKSHMI

Founder | Entrepreneur | IT Coach | Win
Corporate Training

“ If I had a mentor while growing up or when starting my career, I believe I could have explored more, taken clearer directions, and reached certain milestones a few years earlier. A mentor could have helped me channel my energy more efficiently, asked me the right questions at the right time, and made the process of identifying my potential a lot smoother.

That kind of guidance early on would have saved time spent on trial and error and offered a broader perspective on what was truly possible for me. While I eventually found my path, I now realize how powerful mentorship can be — not just for growth, but for faster clarity and confidence in one’s journey.

And that’s why today, I feel strongly about creating spaces where others can find that kind of support early in their journey. ”

PAYAL PATEL

CEO | Urban Realtor

“ I began working at 17—young, curious, and full of dreams. In my early years, I was lucky to have seniors who unknowingly became mentors, guiding me with patience and care. But there were also roles where I had no one to lean on—it felt like fighting battles without armour. That’s when I truly understood the power of mentorship. A good mentor doesn’t just guide your career—they nurture your confidence, help you find your voice, and remind you that you’re not alone. It’s a gift I wish every young professional could receive. ”
